- When a tournament has been registered, it is entered in a global database.
- If the tournament manager decides that referees or umpires are needed to officiate, registration is opened for such. Invitations are generated automatically for people qualified to officiate.
- If the tournament manager decides that there is no need for officiating, registration is opened directly for the players. Invitations are directly generated for the players when the tournament has been registered. In such case, the plan for the tournament does not include a time period for registering officials.

There currently are two tournament formats, a single elimination format with and without a third-place match. The forms that are used are essentially the same as those the badminton association uses. The players are entered on the form by their rating so that the best players do not meet each other in the first round.

-The tournament is executed during the time period indicated in the tournament plan, which is from the starting time for the first venue reserved to the ending time for the last venue reserved for the tournament.

-Precisely who will communicate the results when the match is over is determined when the tournament is created. Reports on results are distributed to the users assigned this task: Either the officials, the tournament manager or the players from a match.

The Oponentus Hypothesis:

Easier tournament administration means new target groups. Competing software is too cumbersome in how they arrange tournaments for a small or medium-sized company to do it themselves for their employees.

Target groups for selling licences to: clubs, companies, cafés, hotels, etc.
